THE WORD

Resurrection stories do not start out on a happy note. People are either consumed by grief, as we find with the weeping Magdalene; or they are locked away in fear, as the apostles were in the upper room, cowering behind bolted doors; or they are imprisoned in their doubt, as Thomas was for a full week after Jesus had appeared to the others; or they are going back home in a downcast and hopeless state, like the two disciples on the road to Emmaus.

And when Jesus does make an appearance, they don't recognize Him. Magdalene thinks He is the gardener, the two on the road to Emmaus relate to Him as a stranger, and today the apostles think He is a ghost and are terrified. It is instructive to remember what it is that allows them to make the connection: for Magdalene it is His calling her name; for the twelve in the upper room on Easter evening it is His greeting of peace and His showing His hands and His side – and this holds for Thomas a week later; for the two on the road, it is the breaking of the bread; and here in today's Gospel it is His showing His wounds and then His eating with them.

A certain pattern emerges concerning where the risen Lord was first recognized and where He continues to be found in our own day. It happens when His voice is heard and His words are apprehended, as well as at the table where the community gathers to eat. We continue to meet the risen Lord when we come to hear God's living word address us in the Scriptures, and we continue to know His touch when we eat the bread of life and drink from the cup of salvation.
